Keeping that in mind, on that first album, Deep Purple In Rock, despite the fact that Ritchie was a far better player than I was, I could still come up with riffs that he'd play. He was interested in simple riffs, he was wise enough to know that you can't be too musical because people won't understand it.

Deep Purple In Rock is what I know and love as one of the first metal records, right along-side Paranoid and Led Zeppelin II. Blah blah Ian Gillan, blah blah the start of MKII, no history lesson is needed. Unlike Fireball, this record sticks to one main formula instead of offering a huge variety of ideas; raw and heavy.
