Following are few excerpts from the book "Psychology and the East" by renowned psychologist Carl Gustav Jung on what things India can teach the West (and these days, itself). For a first visit (in December 1937), he makes many good points which some of us are fast forgetting. I do not find fault with him yet for having wrong observations on the Indian dhoti (he thinks people cannot fight in it, perhaps he had not seen Kalaripayattu being practiced) and studying Buddhism separately, since he ...

For about 2 decades now, we've been told by Academics that we cannot look to the East without seeing ourselves in the Other. (This is a phenomenon that Jung called projection, BTW.) In "Jung In India," Sulagna Sengupta rediscovers the lost story of Jung's highly significant 7-week journey through India, from 17 Dec 1937 through 2 Feb 1938. The only things known prior to this book about Jung & India come from 4 disparate sources: 1) Jaffe's biography of Jung, "Memories, Dreams, Reflections" ...
